

Brief Introduction of Togitsu-cho

History of Togitsu-cho

The origins of Togitsu-cho have not become completely clear yet. However, it is known that it was called Togitsu in the Kamakura Era.

A history of the medieval land development of Togitsu-cho originates with the Togitsu clan as Shokan, the manor owner, or Jito, the land steward, that belonged to Omura Province at least as far back as the Muromachi Era. Togitsu once belong to the Arima clan instead since the Omura clan lost a war at Nakatake Castle.

In the Meiji Era, Togitsu belonged to Nagasaki Prefecture due to the abolition of the han system. In 1872, Meiji 5, Togitsu-mura, Nishitogitsu-mura and Hinami-mura merged to form a new settlement called Togitsu-mura. In the same year, Togitsu-mura's local address was changed to 'the 15th Area, 3rd Sector' due to Kusei, the block registry system. In 1879, Meiji 12, Gunsei, the provincial system, was put in practice to replace Kusei, and Togitsu-mura was incorporated to Nishisonogi-gun. On the 1st of April, 1889, Meiji 22, Choson-sei, township system, came into effect, and Mr. Hei-ichi Kukuchi was elected the first mayor of Togitsu-mura.

On the first of December, 1951, Showa 26, Togitsu-mura was converted to Togitsu-cho, and the 12th mayor, Mr. Sadao Yokoyama, was made the first mayor of Togitsu-cho.

After becoming a Cho, or town, Shishigawa-go became a part of Togitsu-cho on the 15th of January, 1959, Showa 34. the Yokoo area, which used to belong to Togitsu-cho, was moved to Nagasaki-shi on the 1st of April, 1973, Showa 48. In 1962, Showa 37, Togitsu-cho was designated as Toshi-Keikaku-Kuiki, the Urban Development Area, and again as Shin-Toshi-Keikaku-Kuiki, the Revised Urban Development Area on 1969, Showa 44. The population began to grow around these times. From August 1966, Showa 41, Togitsu-cho became a town of minor or medium-sized manufacturing firms by starting landfilling and inviting factories and began to be called Togitsu-Rinkai-Kogyo-Chiiki, Togitsu Waterfront Industrial Area.

In recent years, Togitsu-cho has an increasing number of suburban shopping malls. It has been developing as a hub of industrial transportation and a place of exchange for people and products.
